The Weapon Smith's Forge

By
Sean Wilt

The PC's discover a small smith while on an adventure, abandoned but still full of worthwhile goods.

Treasure Description

The room appears to be a weaponsmith's forge with common tools and various molds, tongs, anvils, and other tools laying about. All are of masterwork quality and are worth 50 - 60gp. In total. Of course, they would have to be taken to a large town or larger settlement in order to sold at all. More than likely, a smaller settlement either has a single smith with all of the tools they would ever need or there is no one in the area who could use them at all. In addition, the tools would require a wagon or several porters to carry all of them in one trip. The tools will sell faster if there are guildhalls in the area.

There are also a lot of unworked metal bars stacked in various piles. One hundred pounds of iron bars are worth around 10 gps, twenty pounds of silver are worth 100 gps, one pound of mithril is worth 500 gps. A small leather pouch containing two moonstones, four freshwater pearls and 90 gps are hidden in a space covered by a loose brick along with some hastily scribbled notes.

A search roll with a DC of 20 will find it. The weapon racks are empty and they are worthless due to being thrown around and bent.

All of the wooden shelves are broken and the counter where business transactions take has large chunks of it torn away. A couple of places in the wall have claw marks covered in dried blood splatters. It is clear that something terrible took place here, and the remote location of the Smithy has kept the secret until the PC's walked on in.

Among the hammers, there is one that is enchanted and inscribed with the words "Hammer of the Gods." The head of the hammer is forged in silver and yet it is hard enough to assist with forging weapons of any metal. It is extremely well balanced and allows the user a +5 competence bonus in the craft (weapons) skill, provided they have at least one skill point allotted to that skill.
